

School talk: the trains of Myloi

How to put it together

1. Start with a question. Ask your class: "Who has ever eaten souvlaki?" Then everyone will listen straight away.
2. Say where Myloi is. Myloi is a village in Greece, in the Peloponnese. It lies by the sea, between the towns of Argos and Nafplio. Show it on a map!
3. Tell three or four facts. Choose from the facts below. Show a photo with each fact.
4. Tell something funny. The story of the souvlaki through the train window, or of the train that was late. That's the kind of thing your class will remember best.
5. End with a quiz. Ask your class two or three questions. Who knows the answer?

Tips

- Practise out loud a few times, for example in front of your parents.
- Look at your class, not just at your cheat sheet.
- Five to ten minutes is a good length.
- At the end, say where you got your information from: the Visit Myloi website.

Facts

- On 4 August 1886 the first train ran from Argos to Myloi.
- From Myloi, a line was built through the mountains to Tripoli. The first train ran there on 1 February 1892.
- At first, Myloi had two stations, belonging to two different railway companies. The small station closed in 1891.
- In the big station, the stationmaster lived with his family above the ticket office.
- In 1947 new trains came to Myloi by boat, because the bridge at Corinth had been destroyed in the war.
- A steam engine uses lots of water. That's why there are two water towers at the station.
- Sellers held trays of souvlaki up to the open train windows.
- Since 2010 no regular trains have run, but the five station buildings and ten old locomotives are still there.

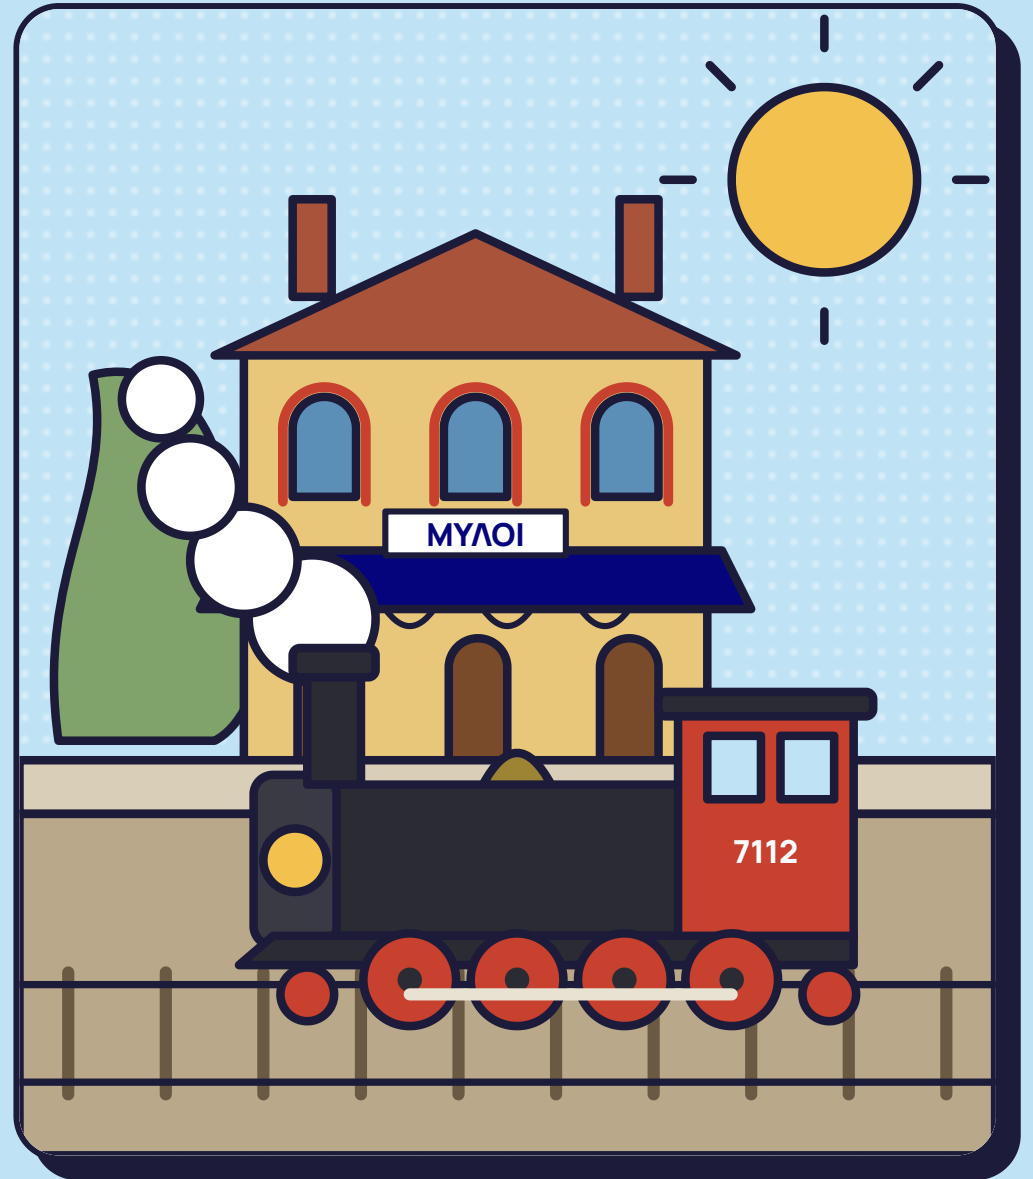

Quiz questions for your class

- How did the new trains get to Myloi in 1947? (By boat!)
- Why were there water towers at the station? (A steam engine needs lots of water.)
- What could you buy through the train window? (Souvlaki!)

The trains of Myloi

A school talk about the old station in Myloi, in Greece.

By: _____

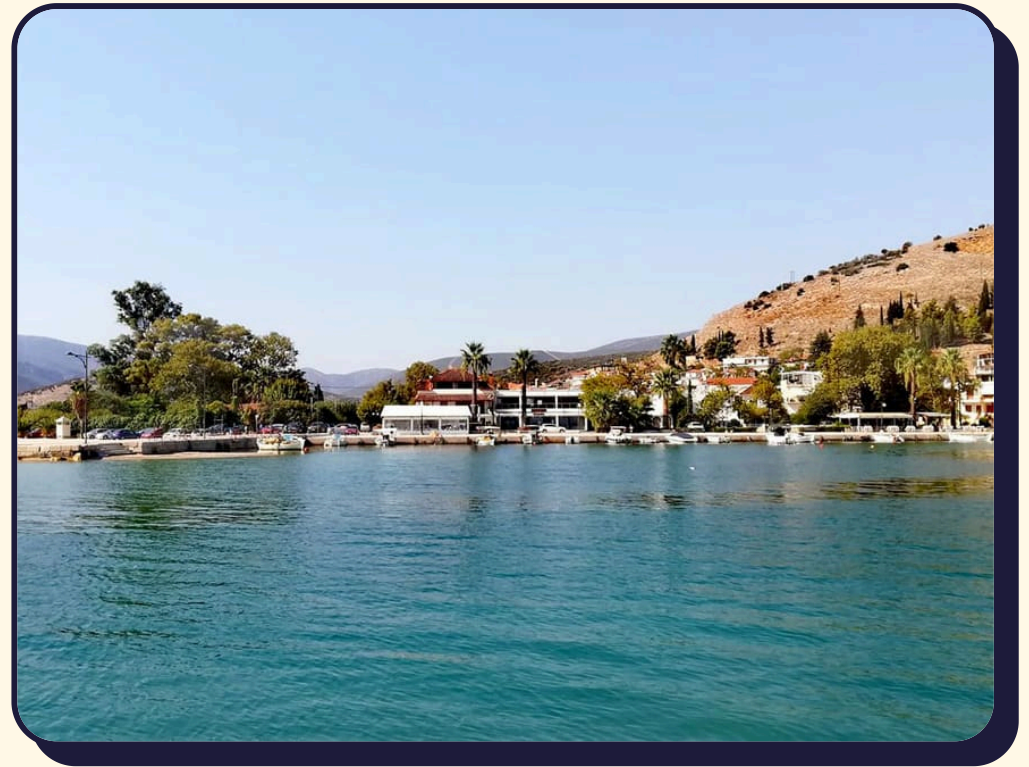

1

Where is Myloi?

Myloi is a village in Greece, in the Peloponnese.

It lies by the sea, between the towns of Argos and Nafplio.

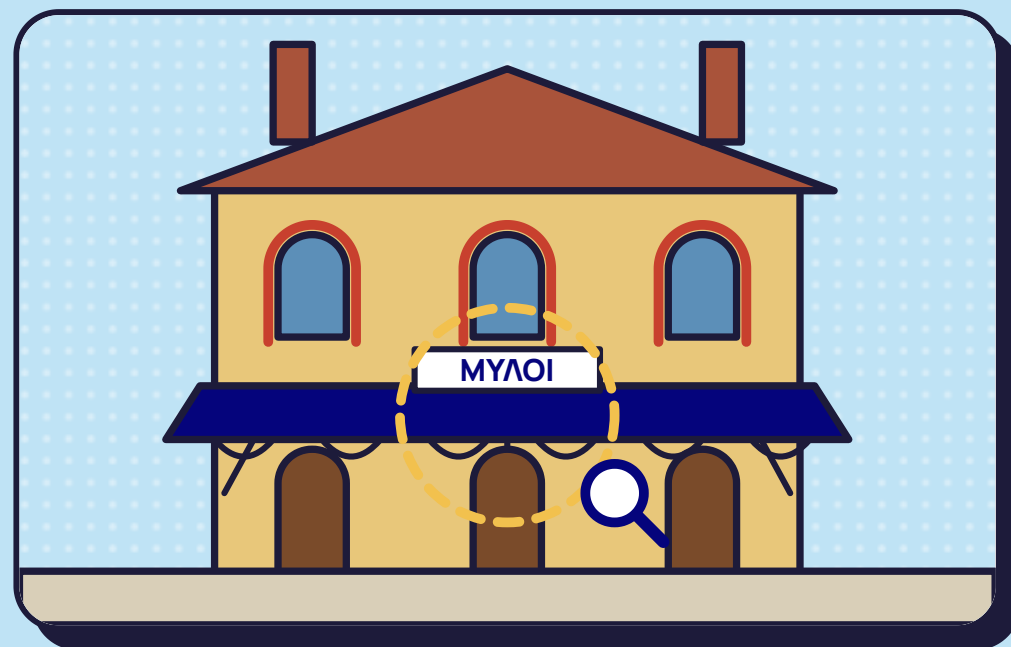

2

The train comes to Myloi

On 4 August 1886 the first train ran from Argos to Myloi.

After that came a line through the mountains to Tripoli: the first train ran there in 1892.

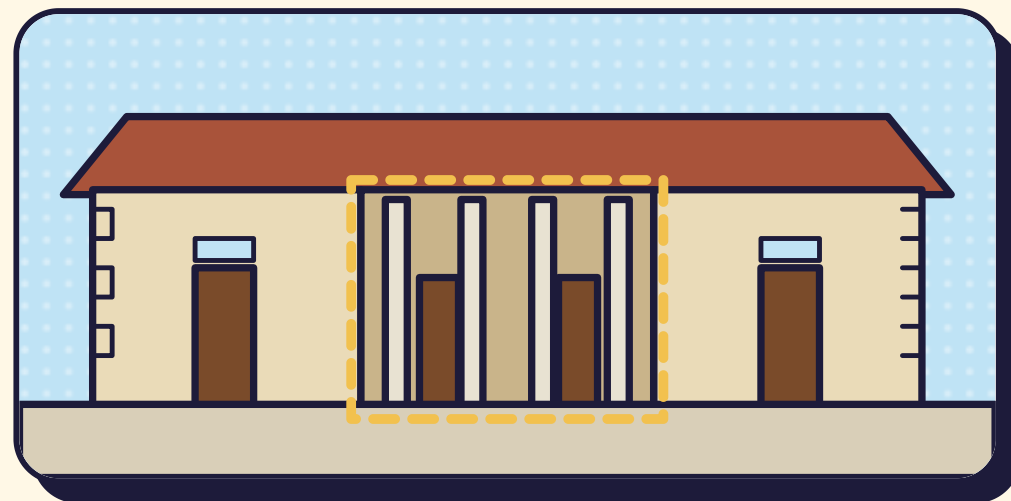

3

Two stations in one village

At first, Myloi had TWO stations, from two railway companies.

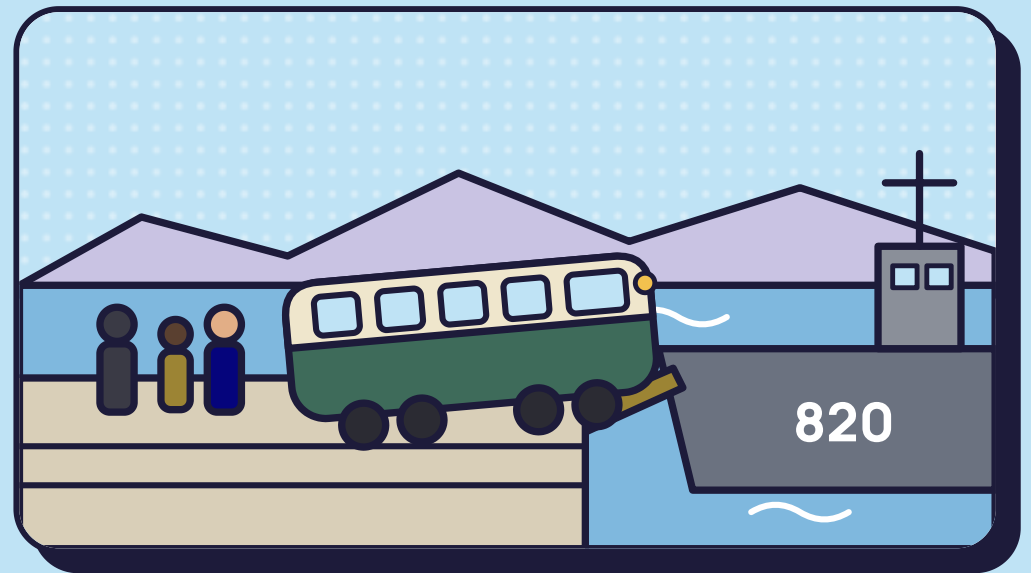

In the big station, the stationmaster lived above the ticket office.

4

A train that came by boat

In 1947 the bridge at Corinth was destroyed. New trains came by boat from Piraeus and rolled onto the pier here!

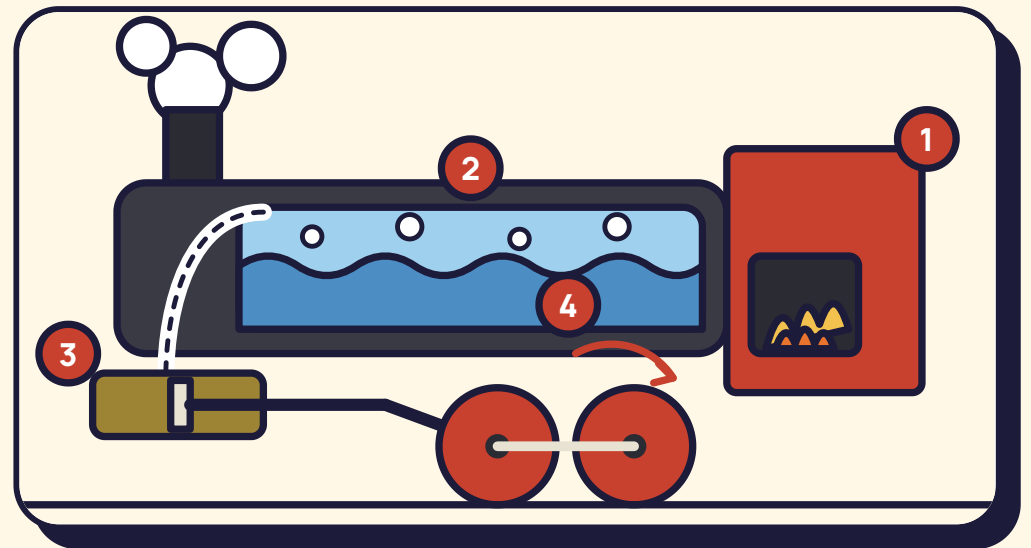

5

A kettle on wheels

Fire makes the water hot, the water turns into steam, and the steam pushes the wheels round.

That's why there are two water towers at the station.

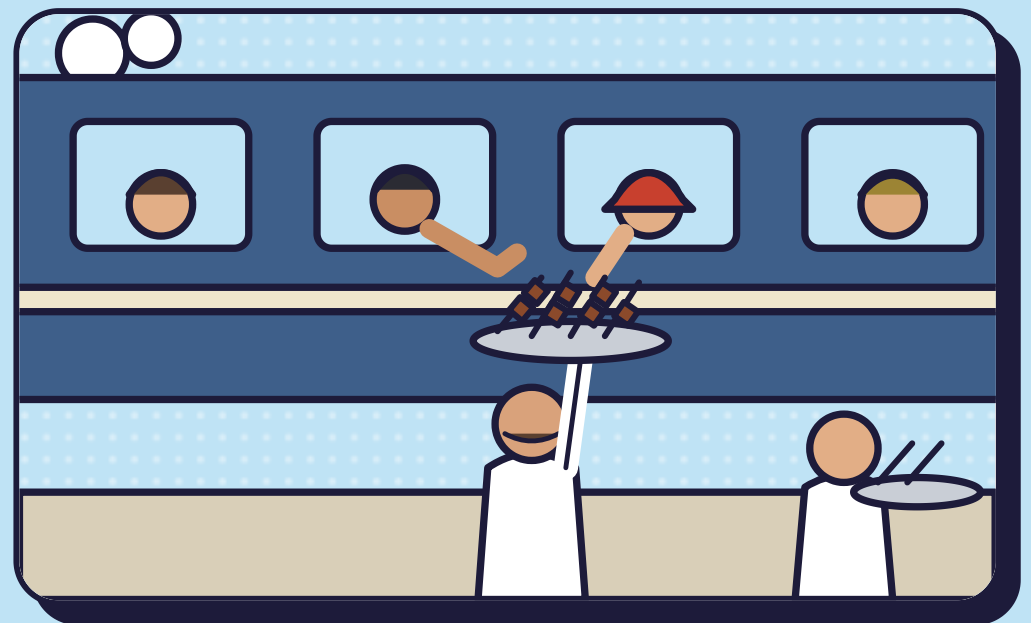

6

Souvlaki through the window

Sellers held trays of souvlaki up to the open train windows.

Pay quickly, grab quickly, and off went the train again!

7

The station now

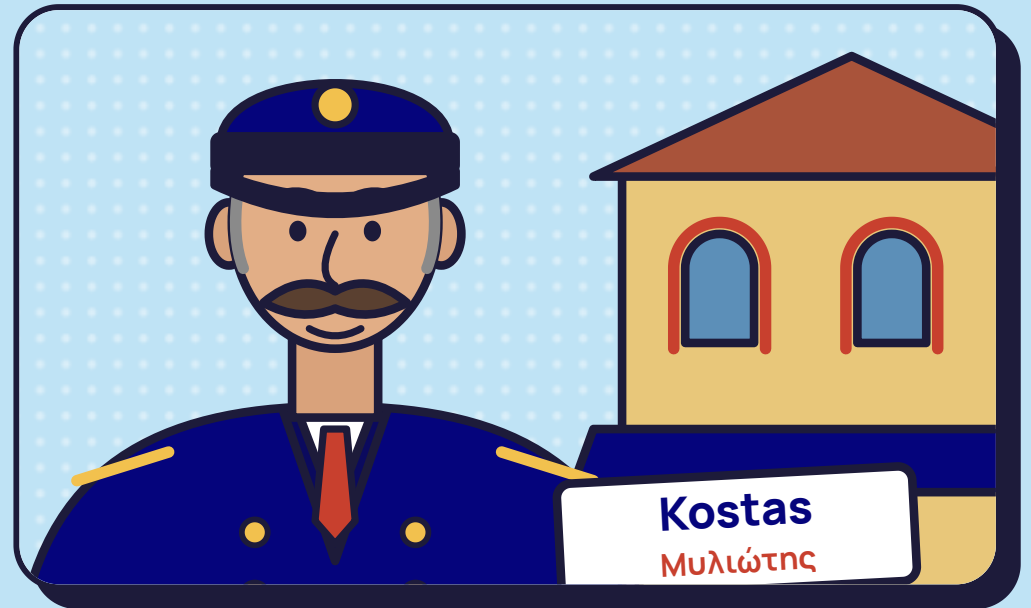

Since 2010 no regular trains have run.
But the five old buildings and ten old locomotives are still there!

8

Quiz!

- How did the new trains get to Myloi in 1947?
- Why were there water towers at the station?
- What could you buy through the train window?

Sources

Information: Visit Myloi (visitmyloi.gr), page about Myloi railway station.

Photos: Visit Myloi. Drawings: Visit Myloi Junior.